About No Kill Louisville

No Kill Louisville (NKL) is a non-profit (501(c)3) group working to change the approach to animal sheltering in the Louisville community. Those who founded the organization believe it is possible to save every "adoptable" pet.

NKL believes this can happen through:

- Trap-neuter-release (TNR) programs for feral and unowned cats;
- Proactive adoptions and pet redemptions;
- Low-cost or free spay/neuter programs;
- Comprehensive foster programs;
- More outreach and interaction with the public on what they can do to help.

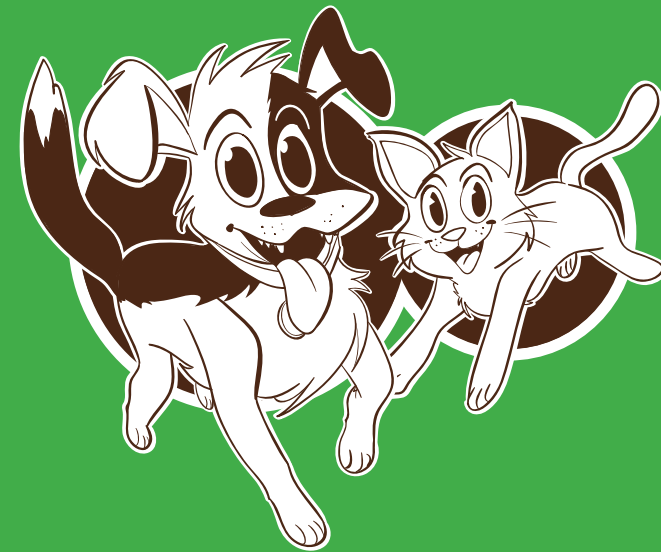

Formed in April 2010, NKL has more than 15,000 members and growing. We connect with our members through local events, social networking, the group's website and word-of-mouth. The group has met with local city leaders about how to best become a no-kill community, including the passage of a no-kill resolution. Members have also raised funds to provide medical care for injured shelter animals, including Hope, a dog thrown from a vehicle along Interstate 65; volunteered at our pet food bank; helped transport pets to safe havens and much more.
